

What vibrant parishes share.

We looked at 18 Episcopal parish websites — fastest-growing, largest and most visible, and affirming parishes in conservative regions. Here's what shows up on most of them.

16/18	“Giving” CTA in the header or hero The most consistent call-to-action	16/18	Facebook, Instagram, and a giving link in the footer Facebook + Instagram + YouTube is the standard triad (14/18).
14/18	A discoverable “Plan a Visit” / “I’m New” / “Visitors” page Named differently across sites	13/18	Service times visible higher up on the homepage The first question a newcomer asks, answered without scrolling.
12/18	Livestream surfaced in hero or top nav Watching online is now an expected entry point	11/18	Real parish photography in the first homepage images Actual people, actual building — not stock.

What a welcome page can actually do.

Eleven things a first-time visitor might look for. How often we saw them on the visitor pages we reviewed.

Service address	17/18	Communion practice	7/18
Episcopal mention	16/18	Parking instructions	5/18
Service day(s)	14/18	What to wear	5/18
Service time(s)	14/18	Service length	4/18
Affirming / welcoming statement	13/18	Where to enter	3/18
Kids / nursery info	10/18

What the rare-but-specific sites do well

- Christ Church Kennesaw names stepless entrances and the Parish Hall ramp, and tells visitors to cross their arms at the altar for a blessing.
- Grace Yukon directs visitors to the Gathering Space left of the front doors; greeters help from there.
- Jubilee Austin is blunt: “no dress code. Seriously.” A service lasts about an hour. All are welcome to receive communion.